How Chocolate Became a Valentine's Day Staple

Conversation hearts, truffles and heart-shaped boxes of chocolates are some of the recognized symbols for many who love to celebrate Valentine's Day. But where did this tradition come from? While the roots of Valentine's Day go all the way back to Roman times, candy gift-giving is a much more recent development. Is it because of chocolate's reputed aphrodisiac qualities, or just a way for candy companies to sell more sweets in the lull between Christmas and Easter? Who came up with the idea for the First Valentine's Day Box of Chocolates?

By the 1840s, Valentine's Day as a holiday to celebrate romantic love had taken over most of the English-speaking world. Richard Cadbury, who was part of a British chocolate manufacturing family and responsible for sales, had a brilliant idea! Cadbury had recently improved their chocolate making technique to extract pure cocoa butter from whole beans, producing a more palatable drinking chocolate than most Britons had ever tasted. This process resulted in an excess of cocoa butter, which Cadbury used to produce many more varieties of what was then called "eating chocolate". Richard recognized a great marketing opportunity for the new chocolates and designed beautifully decorated boxes to sell them in.

While Richard Cadbury didn't actually patent the heart-shaped box, it's believed that he was the first to produce one. The company marketed the boxes as having a dual purpose: when the chocolates had all been eaten, the box itself was so pretty that it could be used again to store mementos. Victorian-era Cadbury boxes still exist, and many are treasured family heirlooms or valuable items prized by collectors.
